Course syllabus

Aims:

To understand the continuity or the lack of from late-Roman British towns to medieval. To understand the influence of the medieval church in the development of medieval towns. To understand the consequences of small, and diminishing populations on the fabric of medieval towns.

Content:

This course will examine four different and distinct medieval towns, all in the east of England. Canterbury, the ecclesiastical town par excellence is still dominated by the presence of the medieval church. Norwich is a merchant town, with fine public buildings, rich town houses and fifty plus parish churches. Cambridge is unlike anywhere else (except Oxford!) - a town almost lost in the world of education. King's Lynn was a new town, planned and built after the Noman Conquest. As a member of the Hanseatic League Lynn is essentially a place to get stuff in and stuff out. We shall visit Lynn for the day.

Presentation of the course:

There will be PowerPoint presentations, questions and class discussion. There will be a whole day exploration of King's Lynn (on foot). It is a flat town.

Outcomes:

A better understanding of the growth of English medieval towns.

A grasp of the basic development of English medieval urban houses

An appreciation of the various factors determining the growth or shrinkage of medieval settlements.
