Tutor biography

Sandy Primrose has spent his professional life as a biologist, initially in academia and then as a senior manager in pharmaceutical, diagnostic and life science companies. He also has worked with various government departments on topics such as the detection of food fraud and the safety of genetically engineered foods. He now works as a consultant helping early stage companies in the healthcare field.

Sandy is a very keen gardener and lectures extensively on plants, horticulture and gardening. He is passionate about teaching and he tries to be both entertaining and educational without being overly technical. When in teaching mode he prefers to use a mix of presentation and active student participation to maximize the return to the student.

Course syllabus

Aims:

To give participants an understanding of the epic journeys (think Indiana Jones meets horticulture) that resulted in the wealth of plants that we have in our gardens today and the post-WWII role of gardens as centres of conservation for endangered plant species.

Content:

The changing drivers of plant hunting from the 16th century to the present day. The different types of plant hunter in the 21st century. Choosing where to go, and why, and the associated logistics. The great plant hunters from the Tradescants (17th century) to Frank Kingdon Ward (early 20th century). The modern-day hunters of ornamental plants (Roy Lancaster, the Coxes of Glendoick, Sue & Bleddyn Wynn-Jones, Dan Hinckley). The importance of crop wild relatives and the Millenium Seed Bank.

Presentation of the course:

All lectures will be illustrated with photos and maps but the emphasis will be on the bigger picture rather than details of individual plants. The lecture style will be relaxed and participants are encouraged to get involved if they wish.

As a result of the course, within the constraints of the time available, students should be able to:

- Appreciate the efforts and the hardships of the plant hunters who transformed our gardens
- Appreciate the current issues surrounding biological conservation and assess its success/relevance to plants
